

Client Hatton Wall

Nature of client business

Hatton Wall, London is a commercial and residential development. The site is based off Hatton Garden, also known as the Jewellery district. The development is over 30,000 square ft and comprised of five floors of office space alongside 7 penthouse residential units. The office development is called Black Bull Yard

Project Location: Hatton Wall, London

Scope of job

Adcock were contracted by Boulton Brooks Real Estate, a family owned investment and development company specialising in residential and commercial properties to install a new comfort heating and cooling system throughout the development. The architects for this development were GPAS who are based in Clerkenwell. They mainly operate in the London area but their portfolio expands across the UK and abroad. The company's expertise extends to a range of building types, including residential, home extensions, office, shopping centres, hospitals and student accommodation.

About the completion

Hatton Wall is a former warehouse building. The design by GPAD Architects combines the old and the new. The offices look over a new courtyard and the building is accessed through a new reception area. The historic features of the warehouse such as the exposed brickwork, high ceilings and large open windows are all preserved.

What the project entailed

Boulton Brooks and GPAD London have both been customers our Reading branch for a few years now. Adcock Reading installed a new comfort heating and cooling system throughout the development.
